

Characters - Cause and Effect

Old Major tells the animals to believe in a future where animals can be equal and free.	The pigs plant the paddock that was meant to be for retired animals with barley to make alcohol for themselves.	Benjamin's belief is that this is how things are and they'll always be the same.
The animals don't stop Boxer being taken away from the farm in a horse knacker van.	A range of animals are executed by the pigs who say they have been secretly plotting against the leadership of Animal Farm.	Snowball is expelled from Animal Farm and is never seen again.
Boxer says that "Napoleon is always right".	Napoleon becomes a dictatorial leader of the pigs protected by the dogs.	The chooks initially protest against having to lay eggs for humans but then cave in.
The pigs carry whips which they use while they supervise the animals doing work.	The pigs move into Mr. Jones' house.	Toby the raven tells the animals about a magical, heaven like place called Sugar Candy mountain, which the animals come to believe. Even though Toby does no work, the pigs feed him.
Clover suspects the pigs of having violated the seven commandments, but accepts the rewritten version of the commandments as the original ones.	The sheep continually bleat "four legs good, two legs bad" whenever anyone begins to say something against the pigs.	The pigs re-write the commandments on the barn wall to suit what is happening.
The next generation of animals know no other existence than the one they have.	Muriel, the wise goat who reads the commandments for Clover but makes no comment.	Mollie leaves the farm to lead a life closer to one that existed for her before the animal revolution.